Among the many milestones and achievements of the year, the 2005 Annual Report of the Santa Barbara Museum of Natural History focuses on three broad topics: the donors and contributors who enabled the Museum to do its great work, the scientific accomplishments of our curators, and the Museum's financial report.

Our Museum is unusual among its peers, in that it relies exclusively on private generosity for its support. This support is reflected not only in the over $850,000 of contributions and grants that funded Museum operations in 2005 but also in the $3.3 million of income drawn from our endowment which, in turn, has been built up through private donations over the decades. In addition to the generosity of financial donors that underpins our Museum, close to 1,000 volunteers generously contribute their time and efforts in support of programs and activities throughout the breadth of our institution. Quite literally, the Museum would not exist, and it could not operate, were it not for this immense generosity of donors and volunteers. We express our deep appreciation to them all.

The 2005 year was marked by a number of significant accomplishments. While this Annual Report does not provide the space to list them, a few do deserve special mention.

We are particularly pleased about the opening of the new Ty Warner Sea Center on Stearns Wharf. It replaces the old Sea Center with a completely new, 50% larger, facility. Six years in the planning, and costing $10 million, the Ty Warner Sea Center is a marvel of interactive exhibits designed to help visitors learn about the immensely rich yet fragile ecology of our ocean environments.

On the main campus, our venerable, 50-year old Gladwin Planetarium underwent a top-to-bottom renovation and was outfitted with a state-of-the-art, full-dome digital projection system by Digistar. You can now go on an exhilarating journey to distant galaxies without leaving the luxury of a comfortably reclining, upholstered seat.

Our Collections and Research Center added important new acquisitions of specimens and artifacts in all departments. Equally important, however, we installed a high powered Scanning Electron Microscope as well as a DNA laboratory—important new tools to support scientific research by our curators.

While the physical growth and improvement of our Museum in 2005 was impressive, at the heart of the institution are programs in research, education, exhibition, and public service that give the physical structure and our collections life and meaning. The scientific publications issued by our curators and listed in this report are just one example of a broad and diverse range of programs, activities, and initiatives carried out during 2005, all dedicated to our mission of "inspiring a passion for the natural world." These programs and activities were conceived, planned, and implemented by an outstanding and devoted staff. They are listed at the very beginning of this report and deserve a special note of thanks for their contributions and dedication to making our Museum a center of excellence.

An important ingredient in any organization's success is board leadership. On behalf of the Board of Trustees, we would like to thank immediate Past President Tom Parker for his exceptional efforts in leading and guiding the Board. His contributions were an important ingredient in making possible the many accomplishments mentioned above.

Best wishes,

Patricia MacFarlane
President
